Items of interest heard along the way:

Those social problems that rocked Easton last week took its toll in football. An Easton-Neshaminy game in any other season would have probably sold out Cottingham Stadium, but it was different last week. First of all, the game was switched to the afternoon because of the unrest. That didn't help matters. Eastonians are accustomed to night football. Then, Neshaminy, fearful of the situation, didn't send a single student bus to the game. Easton school officials figured they were out $4,000 on this game compared to other years . . . And speaking of attendance, there's no boom at ASD STADIUM. There was a poor crowd — not much more than 5,500 paid — at the Allen-Pennsbury game. The contest certainly deserved better than that. It could pick up, though, in weeks to come. Everybody likes a winner and Allen is 3-0, while Dieruff, which plays in the stadium tomorrow night against Easton, is also unbeaten (2-0). Meanwhile, the suburban schools — Northampton, Emmaus and Parkland, in particular — have been packing 'em in.
